

ARMY BILL OPPOSITION NOW KNOWN

REPUBLICAN MEMBERS OF HOUSE
MILITARY COMMITTEE TELL THEIR STAND TO PRESI-DENT.

WILSON UNCONVINCED

Remains of the man that continental Army Plan is best thus far devised—Daniels talks of Navy Plans.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Washington, Feb. 10.—President Wilson was told flatly today by republicans of the house military committee that they believed the committee was practically unanimously opposed to the continental army plan, sponsored by the war department. They said they believed the committee favored strengthening the national guard and empowering the president to draft it into the regular army in time of war. The committee met in the house with the impression that the president still believed the continental army plan the best so far devised. He showed no disposition, they said, to attempt to force adoption of any particular plan, but expressed the conviction that the committee would bring out a bill for an adequate army.

The president told them that while he did not believe it sensible to substitute the national guard for the continental army, he favored strengthening the national guard.

Daniels Tells of Navy Plans.

Secretary Daniels of the navy, defended the administration's naval increase program and advocated immediate building up of an adequate merchant marine. In a speech here today before the chamber of commerce of the United States, devoted to the discussion of national preparedness,

"We can no longer live up to ourselves," said Mr. Daniels. "On our farms we grow more than the public can consume. We must feed much of the world. We have the right also to have a large share in clothing the world, and supplying people in every climate with whatever is manufactured in our mills and factories. But how can we all be prepared? What avail to toiling harvests and large production in factories without adequate and reasonable water transportation?" The securing of an adequate merchant marine is a pressing problem, and it is so tied up with the enlarging and strengthening of our navy, that the two cannot be wisely separated.

Explains Five-Year Program. "The naval program offered by the administration is a constructive, progressive one, and if carried according to the continuous five-year program—the first continuing program ever proposed by an administration—it will give us by the year 1921, thirty-three capital ships of the first line, and twenty-five battleships of the second line, with ten armored cruisers, 108 destroyers, 175 submarines and small craft in proportion."

Mr. Daniels declared himself to be a disciple of Franklin on the question of preparedness.

"This philosopher," the statesman declared, "said there never was a good war nor a bad peace, but he did more to prepare for the impending revolution than any other man," he said.

"No man in the revolutionary period could be preferred before him in the preparation for defense. His achievements for preparedness may well be studied by the people of this day and generation."

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

New York, Feb. 10.—The total number of shipyards in this country to be built for Norwegian interests this year was brought up to twenty-seven today by announcement that seven have just been awarded for building six vessels of 3,000 tons each at Manitowoc, Wis. According to shipping men the Norwegians have been purchasing as many steamers as were available for several months. When they were unable to make any further purchases, they placed orders with American yards. At present, however, the Norwegian consul general said in explanation of the placing of the orders here that formerly Norway obtained many of her steamships from England, but that now British shipyards are busy building British ships. He said that "unheard of" prices are being paid for vessels built in America. A Norwegian agent here said that prices for vessels were at least fifty per cent higher than before the war.

GERMANY WILL FIGHT ARMED MERCHANTMEN

TEUTONIC POWERS SERVE NOTICE THAT SUCH VESSELS WILL BE CONSIDERED WARSHIPS.

POSITION IS JUSTIFIED

Declare England's Action in Fitting Out Merchant Vessels With Guns Justifies Retaliatory Action.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Germany and Austria, through their embassies here, notified the United States of their intention to treat armed merchantmen as warships after March 1.

That date was fixed to give the entire time possible to signify their intentions toward the recent note of the United States proposing the disarmament of all merchantmen.

Clasp Attitude Justified.

Berlin, Feb. 10.—The government contends its measures regarding treatment of armed merchantmen as justified by explicit instructions issued by the British admiral to merchantmen, a copy of which is said to have been obtained by the German authorities. These instructions, it is understood here, were to the effect that merchantmen should carry guns and attack submarines on sight. It is also stated these orders have a counterpart in instructions issued by the government of other countries at war with Germany.

ROCK RIVER FLOOD GOES DOWN RAPIDLY; THINK DANGER OVER

Drop of Eight Inches Noted at Upper Dam Within Last Twenty-four Hours—Water Much Lower at Afton.

A good drop registered in the height of Rock river waters here today relieves somewhat the tension of possible flood conditions. Lower water is also here, but when communication was established with the village it was brought out that the waters were lowering instead of rising.

At noon the height of the river had fallen sixteen inches from the high water mark of a week ago, which made conditions look serious until late last week. Not much of the ice is moving out, but with the warmer temperatures of today and yesterday it is slowly being eaten away.

The electric power plant on Bass Creek is still out of commission, with the result that the village of Afton is in darkness nightly. Repair work is being rushed at the plant to get it into working order just as quick as is possible.

Water and ice nearly a foot deep

During the preceding twenty-four hours up to noon the most rapid drop was registered. Today the gauge at the upper electric plant shows a fall of eight inches since noon yesterday. The river, however, is still twenty-two and one-half inches above normal and danger of flood conditions, although somewhat alleviated, are not wholly passed.

Chief Engineer Alonzo W. Woodworth and Line Foreman John Quinn of the Janesville Electric company this afternoon made a trip to Fulton and Indian Ford to investigate conditions.

The ice at the Narrows was to be inspected to determine whether or not any danger lurked in the possibility of its going out with a rush.

Encouraging conditions at noon were reported from Afton. A rumor of the morning that the river had risen six inches and that a number of families living in the lowlands were preparing to move caused apprehension

LAKOTA PLAYERS IN GAME AT FOND DU LAC

Interstate Team Plays Crack Fondy Five Tonight—They Come Here Friday and Saturday.

Two regular members of the Lakota Cardinal basketball team will play tonight with the so-called Interstate team, along with three other players from Illinois and Wisconsin. Edler, Hemming and Fletcher of the St. Johns team are slated to be in the line-up against the crack easterners at the armory. Fond du Lac's new player, Johnson, will be in the Co. E line-up to replace Attorney Tormy, who was called east recently.

The loss of Tormy may prove a serious handicap to Co. E. Reports have been received here that Johnson is better suited than Tormy and if this is true he must be a kind of an human wizard when it comes to playing basketball, for Tormy was a good player as Co. E had in their game hera.

The line-up for the Lakotas for the game either Friday or Saturday night is not certain, for Fogarty may not be able to come here from Rockford.

The Lakotas will have the best players obtainable for the game and certain that Edler, Hemming,

Dalton and Fletcher will be here.

REFRIEND THE BIRDS DURING WINTER MONTHS

The deep snow covers their usual food—insects' eggs and larvae and the seeds of weeds—and they will starve unless we feed them.

Give them "Hayseed," chaff from the barn floor, corn cobs, scraps of meat, bones and suet; anything eatable and they will repay you a thousand fold by their work in the garden and orchard all the spring.

Do it now. Fasten the meal scraps and suet securely to the trees and see how eagerly the chickadees and woodpeckers go to it. Tread the snow down hard, scatter the seed and crumble there or put it on a board or box and watch the juncos and tree-sparrows fill up. Put out chaff and grain for the quail and meadow-larks in the pasture. They work for us all summer long, eating insects.

Keep it up while the snow lasts. It is not only a fine philanthropy but a paying investment for each one of us. If you want to know more about feeding and protecting birds, write to Mr. Wm. Packard, Agent, National Association of Audubon Societies, 66 Newbury Street, Boston, Massachusetts. Our dumb animals for February.

PRIZES AWARDED IN BOWLING AT Y. M. C. A.

Members Show Interest in Bowling Alleys—Will Award Prizes for High Scores on Friday Night.

On Friday night, February 11th, prizes will be offered to the gentlemen and to the ladies who rolled the highest score for the month of January. Fred Booth took the honors for January with a score of 236. Mrs. Ed. Kohler will be awarded the ladies' prize, having rolled the highest score in her class. Her high score was 166 pins. She was closely followed by another lady with a score of 165.

DOWN WITH BELOIT IS THE BASKETBALL TOSSENS' SLOGAN

Two Contests With Beloit Teams to be Played at the High School Tomorrow Night.

"Down with Beloit" will be the slogan for the Janesville high basketball five in their contest with the Beloit five, old-time rivals. Two weeks ago the Line City five slipped a defeat on the locals by only one point and now in the only chance the blue squad will have to redeem themselves. Coach Keach has been drilling his men to perfection this week until they work like oiled machinery.

Referees from the Line City say that the team will repeat the same thing that they did in the other game, but from the reports in this city it is altogether different. Captain Richards and Kohler or Weirick will probably be at the forward positions. In the last game with Beloit these men could not be stopped, especially Richards, when he would dribble the ball down the floor. Cushing is in prime condition to play at center and Lee and Cronin, the almighty guards, will be at their places.

The second team have not been idle this week either, for they expect a hard game with the Line City seconds. They won from this team in the last game but no chances will be taken tomorrow night and new men will be added to their squad.

A record attendance is expected at the game as this contest between Beloit and Janesville is always a drawing card. The high school orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Merrill, will furnish music at the game between both sides and the basket shooting will poor. The lineups were as follows:

Methodists—Dunwiddie, Sullivan, Powers, Cadman, Black, and Tuckwood.

Baptists—Person, Austin, Kolle, Smith, Badger, and Kowley.

Sullivan scored all the points for her team and Austin made one lone basket for the Baptists.

Miller Huggins and others who had a line on the strength of the Federal league had it right when they said there was hardly a dozen players in the defunct organization who would be able to hold their own in either of the major leagues. There are just about that many players who have been corralled by the big fellows, and it will be seen if all of them will shine as they did in the Gilmore circuit last year.

Release of Tommy Leach by the Cincinnati Reds relieved Hans Wagner the only player still in the major of the great aggregation transferred from Louisville to Pittsburgh in 1909.

Fred Clark, manager, quit at the close of last season, Pittsburgh, in the old days, had a great infield with Bransfield at first, Ritchey at second, Leach at third and Wagner at short.

They played together until 1904.

No body seems to want Hal Chase, once hailed as the greatest of all first sackers, though any big league club can have him for $10,000. Harry Sinclair, who's selling off the Federal stars, has approached all clubs in both the National and American League in a vain effort to dispose of Chase, and if there's no change of heart Sinclair will be loaded up with payment in full of Chase's $8,000 a year contract.

Bill Donovan, the Yankees' manager, is a great admirer of Ty Cobb. He considers him the greatest of players, and handed him the following phrase the other day: "You know Ty Cobb is not as fast as he was. He has grown heavier, thicker in the chest and his legs have lost their slimness. Yet last year he decided to set new base stealing marks and he did it. If he is not injured, and cares to, I know he will steal 100 bases this year. I do not believe that any one else will be able to get into the leadship of the American League unless he experiences eye trouble or age slows him up materially. If any player flashes who can hit .460 Cobb will hit at least .451. Ty is an individual to a certain extent, but not enough to hinder his value to his team."

Bubbles Hargraves is another man from the Cub reserves that can count on getting plenty to do during the coming season.

The Detroit club is reported as having a new manager, Eddie Cicotte, who is a former member of the Chicago White Sox. Cicotte is a good player, but not enough to hinder his value to his team.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Unsettled weather tonight and Friday; probably snow flurries; colder past portion tonight.

"I OBJECT."

This one statement on the part of a United States senator from Wisconsin put a stop to consideration in the upper house of congress of a measure that is vital to the best interests of the whole country in the minds of many thinking men.

It was a bill passed by the lower house of congress on Monday to appropriate the sum of $600,000 for the improvement of the existing navy yards, giving them larger capacity for constructing and repairing ships and materially increasing the number of berths at Annapolis.

The mere statement, "I object," will cause endless delay. It will keep hundreds of workmen out of employment. It will neglect improvements that cost but little now, but if not made might result in the loss of millions to the United States government.

Of course the man who offered the objection, who in the face of a request for unanimous consent to take the matter up at once, said, "I object," is playing politics. There is no question of a doubt about it, but is it the kind of politics that the nation wants at this time?

Possibly, when this same objector seeks re-nomination and re-election, he may have voiced in a tone he can not fail to understand, the opinion of the voters of his home state, who will shout loud enough to be heard from one end of the state to the other, "We object!"

PHILIPP INSISTED.

Governor Philipp, in his address to the assessors in session at Madison, again reiterated his statement that state political places were not for the purpose of political activity and as a reward for faithful service in the past to this cause or that, but made upon the efficiency of the persons selected and he wished it understood he did not want a state employee to become suddenly active in political matters while holding a state office. Just a trifle different from the days when the game wardens and the pill inspectors had all the other inspectors earned their jobs and their pay for political activity in the cause of "reform." Some way or other the people begin to realize they have a man as governor at last who is a man every inch of him.

THE SON-IN-LAW.

Never was the domination of President Wilson by his son-in-law, William G. McAdoo, and his friend, Samuel Untermyer, more completely demonstrated than by the appointment of Louis D. Brandeis to the supreme court, and never was Woodrow Wilson's willingness to prostitute the appointive power, even including appointments to the supreme court, so completely proved. A poll of the federal judiciary of the nation would unquestionably show close to a hundred per cent of the judges disapproving Brandeis' appointment, because he is personally not fitted for the office. It is evident that at least two-thirds of the senators are opposed to Brandeis and yet it seems probable he will be confirmed, because, having made the nomination, the president will stop at nothing to purchase by patronage and legislation the votes of a sufficient number of senators to effect his confirmation.

Aside from the fact that Brandeis is both temperamentally and intellectually not qualified for so high a judicial office. There are specific charges being made as to what his record has been in certain cases with which he has been connected. It is charged that in the railway rate case, after accepting the retainer from the shippers who were seeking to have rates reduced, he concluded his argument by saying that the railroads were receiving insufficient compensation; that he drafted the "tying clause" for the Eastern Shoe Machinery company, assuring the company that it was legal and proper, and defending it before the Massachusetts legislature, and only a short time later was accepted a retainer from a Western Shoe Manufacturers' association, and in their behalf denounced the clause as "pernicious and immoral" before a committee of congress; and that he sold and permitted to be published broadcast an opinion defending the extension of the patent monopoly, in defiance of the supreme court. He is regarded as favoring the extension of the patent monopoly to an extent which Chief Justice White described in the supreme court as enabling the manufacturer of a sewing machine to dictate to the woman who used it precisely what sort of thread, needles and oil she must use, and what price she must pay for them.

SANITATION FOR ALL.

Country life, to city people, is idyllic for health, with water, air, and food as pure as the open skies overhead. A different picture of country life appears in the annual report just given out at Washington of Surgeon General Blue. A typical statement from this report is that 50 per cent of the rural homes are drinking water from polluted sources.

Country people are ordinarily very complacent about their water supplies. If the water tastes good, it is generally felt that it is good. If the family had good health for a period of years, the matter of proximity to stables or closets is not considered much.

Rural boards of health, where such exist, are apt not to take their duties seriously. Many of them would feel that they were appointed merely to take necessary action in case some serious epidemic should break out. They would not feel it was in their province to take steps in advance to remove possible chances of pollution.

Country people are jealous about their own prerogatives. A doctor or board of health man who came smirking about their premises would be likely to be considered officious and meddlesome. Provision men would not be likely to take kindly to rigid inspection of their supplies.

The oldtimers of country life were very sturdy old folks, who worried not about germs or infections. Probably they lived longer than the modern generation that has become so fussy about health and sanitation. At the same time people who have ever lived in the country must be impressed with the idea that doctors are usually busy. Cases of sickness are quite common, and are a favorite subject of conversation when other interests lag. Perhaps if country people paid a little more attention to modern science, there would not be so many people ill. A good home water supply is not costly in most places where it is not provided by public works. And medical services and nursing cost a lot more than they used to.

SIMPLY DISCIPLINE.

Essentially the bad record of American railroads for disasters comes down to a question of discipline. An American railroad manager once said that the man who had been careless once, and had become thoroughly frightened, is often a better railroad man for the experience, whereas if he was discharged and a new man put on, the latter might have lacked just this experience of disaster to make him careful.

It will strike the general public that this is not a very safe basis for good railroading. Men by temperament fall into one of two classes, the reckless and the cautious. No man who is not temperamentally of a very cautious type is fitted to be a locomotive engineer. Such a man is not apt to have these narrow escapes, for the reason that he does not gamble on chances. If he has not a clear track ahead, he runs in such a way that he could stop if need be.

The quicker the American people demand that only that kind of men run trains the sooner railroading will become as safe as it might be.

When favorable business news is announced, the gullible public rushes to buy stocks. Then the insiders who knew the good news long before and sold out at top prices, proceed to put the market down.

The feminine idea of preparedness seems to be the best of all, and that to keep well informed from the newspaper advertisements about the bargains in clothing and home supplies.

From the pictures of the bathing suits worn at the winter resorts, it will be seen that they are highly successful toward the purpose for which they were designed and secured, that of attracting attention.

If President Wilson's speech-making tour attracts as much attention as the departure of the ball teams for the training camps, he may consider himself fortunate.

If you keep your mouth shut the first time you buy an automobile, the dealer may not discover that you don't know the difference between the spark plug and the chassis.

When the weather bureau predicts a storm for today, the prudent man begins to think he must hunt up that umbrella for use day after tomorrow.

While the price of gasoline is unreasonable, the public must expect to pay for the satisfaction of having the oil business done by thirty-three companies instead of one.

The Smart Set at the winter resorts may not enjoy the weather any better than at home, but they have the satisfaction of doing the correct thing.

President Wilson has been out on the road making a commendable though futile effort to spend his allowance for traveling expenses.

The convictions of some of our statesmen seem to depend on the country that their constituents were born in.

The principal competition at the winter resorts seems to be as to who shall be able and willing to spend the most money.

The school children claim they always give a teacher a fair trial before proceeding to break up her work.

There is no danger of President Wilson's being impeached unless he should veto the pork and pie bills.

It is considered unfair in basketball to slug the opponents when the umpire is looking.

The winter herring fisheries having ended successfully, the sardine supply for next season is assured.

BANKRUPTCIES DECREASED IN GERMANY DURING 1915

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.] Berlin, Feb. 10.—A noteworthy decrease in the number of bankruptcies was one of the more striking features of Germany's business life in 1915. According to an official report issued there were only 4,580 bankruptcies as against 7,738 in 1914. These figures are commented upon in the press as denoting the economic soundness of Germany's position.

MILWAUKEE PASSES A "MOVING" ORDINANCE

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE] Milwaukee, Feb. 10.—The axiom that it is cheaper to move than pay rent doesn't hold good in Milwaukee any more. A law went into effect today which requires that each expressman report all transfers and removals of goods each week to the city clerk. Merchants, landlords and installment houses procured the passage of the ordinance in the hope that it would catch those of a roving disposition who are inclined to forget their creditors.

BANKRUPTCIES DECREASED IN GERMANY DURING 1915

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

London, Feb. 10.—The taxi shortage in London has caused the public to fill the mail bags in the local newspapers with complaints concerning the nuisance of drivers and the whistling nuisance. During rush hours, especially during dinner and theatre times, drivers often refuse to take fares unless they chance to be going in the direction the driver favors. This is due to the rule that drivers when not carrying passengers must pay for the taxi.

A movement for a law to prevent the use of whistles to call taxis is suggested, while putting down a nuisance, it would not help transportation facilities.

The real trouble is traced to the enlistment of competent drivers.

Because of this, some of the taxi companies have temporarily retired from carrying passengers.

"Humph!" Ossie Spivigs explained to himself, and the time took the face off and squirted sand in cologne into the left port hole. Then, after breathing a prayer on the hands and rubbing it in well, he returned the clock to its face and shook it again. It remained in a condition of non-committal somnolence.

"Ho-ho," swore Ossie Spivigs, and hurled the blamed thing forcibly into the stone fireplace. Instantly it began ticking with sensible industriousness.

"Leave it to me!" said Ossup loftily, and placed the clock back on the mantel and lit his pipe with the air of somebody who really was somebody.

The Condition of Your Teeth is of Vital Interest to you

Each year sees the value of good dentistry increasingly appreciated, more and more the public is asking for and expecting better dental service.

The importance of the dentist in health conservation is now most generally recognized. Physicians and surgeons, more than ever before, are seeking the co-operation of the dentist in their efforts to discover the cause of physical ailments and to cure them.

The dentist is having placed upon his shoulders a very great and grave responsibility. And this responsibility cannot be ignored or shifted. He must be able to discover the hidden disease often located in the jaws, and eradicate the disease.

The more skillful and the more careful the dentist, the more keenly he recognizes the necessity for and the value of good dental work for the health of his patients.

The dental surgeon is no longer concerned solely with the repair, treatment and replacement of teeth. He is concerned most seriously with his patient's health and life. I am each of my patients in this personal relation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME ...

Copyright 1915 by Frank H. Spearman.

Rhinelander felt he could say no more. They discussed other things for a time and she then confided to him her plans for making a start. Nothing in all the rapid events of the fortnight had seemed to him more tragic than this resolve that his old friend's daughter had so resolutely taken. He looked almost weary and troubled as he took from his pocket book a card and on it wrote the message Helen had asked him to write:

"Arthur Gaylord, Superintendent C. R. & T. R. R."

"Dear Gay: The bearer, Miss Helen Holmes, wants work. Anything you can do will be appreciated. R."

Though her resolution had been taken, it seemed to require all of Helen's courage to make the actual start on the path she had chosen. She reached the superintendent's office at Beaman next day, after wandering all over the yards to find it, almost frightened out of her undertaking.

Gaylord, the superintendent, met her with a consideration that dispelled her fears. In a few words he spoke feelingly of her father, and after asking what she would like to do, gave her a note to the agent at Signal station, assigning her for clerical work due to the cut-off construction, already under way there.

George Storm, the freight engineer, had not seen Helen since the funeral of her father—which he had lain off to attend—nor had he heard of her. He was east-bound at Beaman one morning, comparing orders with his conductor, when he saw Helen in her severely plain black about to board the local passenger train which was to take her to Signal to begin work.

The engineer hastened to her. She met his utter astonishment—when she had told him what she was doing and why—without embarrassment or confusion, only laughing a little at his concern.

But when, questioning her further, Storm learned of the cut-off operations, now begun—not alone by the Tidewater people, but as well by their rivals—the Colorado & Coast Line—his suspicions were aroused and he disclosed them to Helen without reserve. "That Colorado & Coast crowd are running our people a hard race on the cut-off construction. They know something about that original survey—they must—or they would never start in so far."

Helen smiled incredulously. "I think that could hardly be, Mr. Storm. You know the men building now against our line were then father's own associates, and my friends."

Storm was stubborn in his attitude. "They are supposed to be your friends," he said skeptically.

"At all events, they have all offered me every assistance since father's death," declared Helen. "They didn't want me to do what I am going to do. But—" she straightened almost imperceptibly. "I would rather be dependent on no one—at least, as long as I can be."

He looked unabashed into her frank eyes: "I can't be sorry for that, anyway," he said slowly. "Everything else that happened," he hesitated again. "I am sorry for. No, not everything, either!" His face lighted lazily. "I am running the locals, now—85 and 86—and I'll have a chance, maybe, to see you every day."

The Coast & Colorado line backers showed all of their aggressiveness in their new undertaking. Headquarters for their cut-off work were set up not a stone's throw from Signal station where Helen had gone to work. Nor was energy the only manifestation of their spirit. The keen rivalry of the endeavor to reach the Superstition range with a line first extended even to the construction crews, and as the work progressed the foremen would hesitate at nothing to delay or embarrass their opponents in the race.

Spike, aided with a car by Seagruer after he had broken jail, had made good his escape and was now something of an incubus on Seagruer's hands. The construction camp offered a temporary outlet for his activities, and though Spike and hard work had never been on worse terms of intimacy, Seagruer sent him freshly dressed up to the Colorado line camp. As the feud between the two companies grew, Seagruer conceived that a tool, and especially one of Spike's stamp, might prove of service to him in the camp of the enemy. "Get a job with the Tidewater, and keep me posted on every move," he said.

TRIANGLE ROMANCE OF LOVE AND WAR

Dorothy Gish in "Old Heidelberg" the Feature at the Princess.

Roscoe Arbuckle also in a top notch Keystone comedy, "Old Heidelberg," starring the petite and pretty Miss Dorothy Gish, struck a high mark in dramatic and entertainment art at the Princess last night. To say whether or not the Triangle programs are precluded, judging by last evening's house, it is easy to say that some attraction in the new series of pictures seems to draw them. "Old Heidelberg" is a quaint little romance of palace and university, where Wallace Reid as Prince Karl throws aside many of his royal dignities and makes love to Dorothy Gish, the simple little girl who keeps the picture done with a nice regard for atmosphere and there are a number of delicate touches which go to show that the hand of only an expert director could accomplish such results.

Fat, good natured Roscoe Arbuckle was right in his native element playing the part of the fat boy husband in "Fatty's Fall," a funny Keystone burlesque. There's a lot of action in this comedy and it all went at top speed. "Old Heidelberg" and "my today" in his Keystone comedy will be seen again this evening at the Princess.

"MR. GREX" PROVES VERY ENTERTAINING

There are always rare qualities in Lasky's photo productions, but "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," which was presented at the Apollo yesterday, exceeds the customary excellence, so finished is it and handled with such literary plausibility. Theodore Roberts was seen in the title role with Dorothy Davenport as his daughter. Carole Lombard appeared as the American.

It is a queer, weird tale of European diplomacy, with a dash of love, a princess and a young American in it, produced from E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, given by Lasky a pictorial presentation that makes it even more entrancing than its printed form. Logix isn't to be locked up in it; ordinary folks don't meet up with such adventures. But the soft touches, the clever bits of procedure, the smooth interpretations of the sinuous ways of intriguing diplomacy, take the realism that make it all seem plausible.

to Spike, giving him money as he did so. Rhinelander, as vice-president of the Tidewater, had been charged with the cut-off operations and took so lively an interest in it that he personally directed much of the work. Moreover, he made it a point to keep his crews well supplied with the shins of war—in this case, men and explosives for the rock work. Both were scarce, and much of the time the two roads were bidding strongly against each other for them. When Spike applied in the tent office to Rhinelander's foreman, Pickens, for a job, the latter, though not impressed with his appearance, thought it a chance to hire a man away from the opposition, and told Rhinelander he would put the fellow on the pay roll.

the Myers three days, commencing Feb. 10, should give thanks that he is living in the present instead of the past 500 years ago, else he might have attracted the attention of the "Witch smeller," old Mathew Hopkins, and short would have been his stuff.

That is unless he scared Hopkins and his co-laborers to death.

The life story of Fredrik the Great is in itself a story of remarkable advancement in the conjurer's art.

From a small beginning with a deck of cards as his sole asset, he soon carries a company of ten people and can afford scenery and effects.

Fredrik the Great departs from the usual path trod by magicians and sets for himself a high standard of perfection that has been characteristic of his success, for he sought for novelties for the big creations and the most wonderful illusions.

In the series of occult miracles he performs the mysteries of the Orient and the Occident. The unseen power to fulfill master's bidding, Mme. Petrova in "My Madonna."

Like all the Keystone comedies, which are under the sign of the Triangle, "Fickle Fatty Fall" will appear exclusively at the Princess Theatre to-night. July 1st, for "Roscoe's Roundabout."

The life story of Fredrik the Great does not convince almost anyone that the evil one had first mortgage on his future salvation, were it not for his personality and most pleasing characteristics. It is no wonder people of all nationalities want to see this entertainer, who attracts to his mysterious performance thousands who rarely attend a theatrical.

WOMAN'S PAGE

Marrying for Money

BY MRS. EVA LEONARD

Sensible Mrs. Morton Sizes Up Jacob Townsend's Bride.

"Is that young Mrs. Townsend?" asked Nell Morton, peering over her glasses at the retreating figure on the sidewalk.

"Yes; Dick thinks she is very handsome," Nell was rapidly dusting the "brace-a-brac" on the mantle.

"Huh!" snorted Mrs. Morton. "Fine feathers make fine birds."

"Men always admire an exquisitely dressed woman, but when it comes to dressing one in the admired fashion, that is another matter. There was aspiration in Nell's tone.

"One can excuse such silliness in a young man. They know no better; but a man's a fool."

Townsend's eyes should be able to tell gold from glitter. I've known him for years; knew his first wife. She was a womanly woman, a real wife. She saved and helped in every way to get ahead, and now this upstart comes along and sows the country with her cawing. Men are fools!" The last words came out with explosive force.

"Well, if they are not I defy any one to pick out the one who would not be given a chance. Now, Jacob Townsend was a model husband. The kindest man in his family. Well, you know how his children are indulged. He was so devoted to Marian that you would have said he appreciated her, and that if he ever married again he would pick out a woman like her; a woman that had some sense and who could think of something besides combing her hair and putting on dry goods." There was withering scorn in her tones. "It would take a magnifying glass to discover some women when they have their clothes off; there is so little to them; just a bunch of skirts."

"Oh, Mrs. Townsend would know that you were a back number if she heard you say 'bunch of skirts,' laughed Nell. "Skirts are few and light nowadays."

Mrs. Morton snorted. "Well, many or few, it doesn't matter; their whole time and thought is taken up with them, and their souls—I sometimes wonder if they have any."

"Why, mother!" exclaimed Nell. "What do you understand by a soul?" asked the old lady.

"Why—the part of us that does not die?" replied Nell.

"Now, if all the energy of the woman is spent in fixing herself up to be admired, there is time to amuse herself and feed her vanity, so that she can forget how miserably pretty and trifling she is, and she is put in a place where there are none of these things that have taken her attention, you see how developed she would be."

"Mother, you should have been a preacher; you are vivid enough to make people see straight," laughed Nell.

"Preacher! No preacher for me. I want to be a practical. If I don't count for what I do, it won't count at all. It's what we are, not what we say that matters. That's what is the trouble with poor Mrs. Townsend. She is a selfish doll. She has never realized that there is anyone besides herself in the world, and she has not begun to live."

"She would resent being called poor after marrying for all that money," was evident Nell had no love for her.

"That is the symptom of her poverty. No woman who had a spark of self-respect could sell her soul for a mess of pottage. Besides, from what you say, I should think she had not much interest in life but to amuse herself. Such a degree of poverty I can hardly imagine. Those who hunt happiness never find it; it flies before them. But those who are absorbed in some very work book up and are surprised to find that happiness sits at their side."

Mrs. Morton rubbed her nose and looked at Nell over her glasses.

"I never thought of it, but I believe you are right," said Nell dreamily.

Heart and Home PROBLEMS

MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON
Letters may be addressed to
MRS. THOMPSON
In care of the Gazette.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) What can I do to rid myself of pimples and blackheads?

(2) What can I do to thicken my hair and remove dandruff?

(3) What is the most simple remedy you have for chilblains?

(4) I have been going to a girls' school and have drifted a ways from boy friends. I recognize them, but do not converse with them. How can I know them better?

(5) To cure blackheads make an ointment of one ounce of soap liniment and one ounce of ether; mix. At night scrub the face thoroughly with hot water, using a complexion or other soft brush. After rinsing, apply the mixture to each of the spots and let it remain on over night. Wash off in the morning with hot water. Continue until the spots have disappeared. Then twice a week wash the face with this mixture, removing the liquid by rinsing with clear water. If there are large pores, wipe over each with a little alcohol.

For pimples that frequently appear with blackheads make an ointment of two ounces of potash napthal, twenty grains of sulphur precipitate and twenty grains of peach soap. Rub over the pimples at night.

This may be used at the same time as the blackhead mixture.

(6) Wash the hair in pure castile soap melted in water. Massage after drying with liquid vaseline. Move the fingers from the wrist when loosening the scalp from the head. Use this massage than grease and do not allow the vaseline to spread over the hair, as it collects dust and makes the hair dull and soiled looking.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I received an announcement of relative's marriage. Am I supposed to send a present or congratulations, or shall I call personally? It still wish their friendship? The bond of mine, but we are not very well acquainted and I don't know what to do.

IGNORANT READER: A present is not necessary. I think it would be best to call on his wife.

HEALTH TALKS

OVEREATING AND HOW IT WORKS

To have a good appetite and be a competent "table-cleaner" is the popular sign of good health. Yet overeating is a grand thing for us doctors.

One who eats more than he can metabolize or burn up is likely to experience one or more of the following effects: Constipation, auto-intoxication, biliousness, stomach trouble, "gas," flatulence, that tired feeling, drowsiness, laziness, gradual development of obesity, liver complaint, irritability and divorce. Nobody loves a fat man, even his own wife just tolerates him.

Along toward thirty-five or forty overeating begins to get in its work on the body. By this time one's hab-

TODAY'S AID TO BEAUTY

An especially fine shampoo for this weather can be easily made at trifling expense by simply dissolving a teaspoonful of canthrox in a cup of hot water. Pour slowly on scalp and massage briskly. This creates a soothng cooling lather that dissolves and removes all dandruff, excess oil and dirt. Rinsing leaves the scalp spotlessly clean, soft and pliant, while the hair takes on a glossy richness of natural color, also a fluffiness which makes it seem very much heavier than it is. After a canthrox shampoo arranging the hair is a pleasure.—Advertisement.

RECOGNIZING ONE'S SELF

She Doesn't Know That She Is Super-Cautious.

A friend of mine who has slightly sub-normal sight, but much more than the normal sense of humor, delights to tell this story on herself.

As she approached a doorway in a department store one day, another woman approached from the opposite direction. Miss H. (my friend) stepped to the right, the woman did the same. Miss H. then stepped to the left, her vis-a-vis was seized with the same inspiration at the same moment. After repeating this dodging twice, my friend thought it was time to put an end to the misunderstanding, so she stood perfectly still and said with rather chilly politeness:

"Madame, if you will stay on one side or the other, perhaps we can manage to pass each other."

Whereupon the floorwalker bore down upon her and explained that she was standing in front of a mirror.

The Ought to Know What She Looks Like by This Time.

Miss H. is a woman of fifty. In spite of her near-sightedness, which is by no means extreme, it does seem as if she ought to know her own appearance well enough to recognize herself by this time, doesn't it?

And yet, when you stop to think of it, is not inability any more remarkable than the common inability to recognize one's character self? Think how many, many people there are who live with themselves for a life time without seeming to have the slightest acquaintance with that inner self.

Everyone But Himself Expects Him to Be Late

For instance, I know a man who is always late. He never will beat himself until the last moment when hurry will not save him; he never will allow quite enough time to reach a place. Other people recognize this failing and count upon it in making appointments with him. If it is necessary to have him at any place at a particular time they specify a half hour earlier, knowing that is the only way to be sure. One would think that himself than anyone else, would be, having had more experience realize that he is always late and expect it of himself. On the contrary, he is perennially surprised when he finds someone waiting for him. He arrives breathless from his last-mile hurrying and assures you that he fully expected to be there in plenty of time, but that some unforeseeable accident kept him.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS—The Dramatic Efforts Weren't Entirely Lost

BY F. LEIPZIGER

The Lone Wolf

By
LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

(Copyright, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

Followed a vivid flash; then complete darkness; with a well-aimed kick—an elementary movement of la saraute—Lanyard had dislodged the light switch, knocking its porcelain box from the wall, thus breaking the connection and causing a short circuit which extinguished every light in the house.

With his way thus apparently cleared, the police in confusion, darkness abetting him, Lanyard plunged on; but in midstride, as he crossed the threshold, his ankle was caught and jerked from under him by the still prostrate younger sergeant.

His momentum took him to the floor with a crash—and may have spared him a worse mishap, for in the same breath he heard the report of a pistol and knew that Popinot had fired at his fugitive shadow.

As he brought one heel down with crushing force on the sergeant's wrist, freeing his foot, he was dimly conscious of the voice of the commissaire shouting a frantic prayer to Popinot to cease firing in the dark. Then the pain-maddened sergeant crawled to his knees, lunged blindly forward, knocked the adventurer back in the act of rising, and fell on top of him.

Hampered by two hundred pounds of fighting Frenchman, Lanyard felt that the cause was lost, yet battened on—and would while breath was in him.

With a heave, a twist, and a squirm he slipped from under, and swinging a fist at random, hurt his knuckles against the mouth of the sergeant. Momentarily the latter relaxed his hold, and Lanyard struggled to his knees, only to go down as the indomitable sergeant grappled a second time.

Now, however, as they fell, Lanyard was on top, and transforming both hands to his antagonist's left forearm, he wrenched it up 'n' around. There was a cry of pain, and he jumped clear of one no longer to be reckoned with.

Nevertheless, as he had feared, the delay caused by the struggle had proved ruinous. He had only found his feet when someone unknown hurled himself bodily through the gloom and wrapped his arms round Lanyard's thigh. And as both went down, two other bodies piled up on top.

For the next minute or two Lanyard fought blindly, madly, viciously, striking and kicking at random. For all that—even with one sergeant hors de combat—they were three to one; and though with the ferocity of sheer desperation he shook them all off, at one time, and gained a few yards more, it was only again to be overcome and borne down, crushed beneath the weight of the three.

His wind was going; his strength leaving him. He mustered up every ounce of energy, all his wit and courage, for one final effort; fought like a cat, tooth and nail; toiled once more to his knees, with two antagonists clinging to him like wolves to the flanks of a stag; shook one off, regained his feet, swayed; and in one final flasch of ferocity dashed both fists repeatedly into the face of each him.

That one was Popinot; he knew instinctively that this was so, and a fierce joy filled him as he felt the man's clutching relax and fall away and guessed how brutal was the damage he had done that fat, foul countenance. Then, free, he made off, running, stumbling, reeling, gained the reception hall, flung open the door, and heedless of the picket who had fired at him from below the window, threw himself bodily down the steps and away.

Three shots sped him through that intricate tangle of the night-bound park. But all flew wide; and the pursuit—what little there was—blundered off at haphazard and lost itself.

He came to the wall, crept along in shelter of its deeper shadow until he found a tree with a low-swing branch that jutted out over the street, climbed this, edged outward, and dropped to the sidewalk.

A shout from the direction of the nearest gate greeted his appearance. He turned and dashed off. Running feet for a time pursued him, and once he heard the rumble of a motor. But he recovered quickly, regained his wind, and ran well, with long, steady, ground-consuming strides, and doubled, turned, and twisted in a manner to wake the envy of the most subtle fox.

The pursuit failed once more. In time he felt warranted in slowing down to a rapid walk.

Weariness was now a heavy burden upon him, and his spirit numbed with desperate desire for rest; but his pace did not flag nor his purpose falter from its goal.

It was a long walk to which he set himself and, as soon as he felt confident of freedom from espionage, a direct one. He plodded without faltering to the one place where he could feel sure of finding his beloved, if she lived and were free. He knew that she had not forgotten, and in his heart he knew that she would never again of her own will fail him.

Nor had she, when—wary and spent from that heart-breaking climb the merciless acuity of the Butte Montmartre—he staggered rather than walked past the sleepy verger and found his way through the crowding shadows to the softly luminous heart of the cathedral of the Sacré-Cœur, and found her kneeling, her head bent upon hands resting across the back of the little chair before her, a slight and timid figure lost and lonely in the long ranks of empty chairs that filled the body of the nave.

Slowly, almost fearfully, he went to her, and silently slipped into the chair by her side.

She knew, without looking up, that it was he.

After a little her hand stole out to his, closed round his fingers and drew him toward with a gentle, insistent pressure. He knelt them with her, hand in hand—filled with the wonder of it, that he to whom religion had been nothing should have been brought to this by the magic of a woman's love.

He knelt for a long time, for many minutes, his somber gaze questioning the golden shadows and the ancient mystery of the farther choir and distant shining altar—and there was no move doubt in his heart but that, whatever should ensue of this, the restless spirit of the Lone Wolf was laid at last.

But in time he remembered how urgent was their plight, and remembering, found courage to break in upon her devotions.

"We must go," he said gently. "We haven't much time, and we must be out of Paris before dawn if we're to live to see another sundown. I think that will be all right—I've a standing arrangement with the minister of war."

"Hum!" he said gravely. "I don't mind telling you now, that's precisely what I am afraid of."

"Nonsense!" the girl cried in open protest. "What could they do?"

"Please don't ask me," Lanyard begged seriously. "I might try to tell you."

"But don't worry, please!" Fugitive her hand touched his arm. "We're ready."

It was true enough. Ducroy was moving toward them again.

"All is prepared!" he announced in sonorous accents.

In a sober silence they approached the machine.

Vauquelin kept himself aloof while Lanyard and a young officer helped the girl to a seat on the right of the pilot's seat and strapped her in. When the adventurer had been similarly secured in the place on the left the two sat, imprisoned, some six feet above the ground.

Lanyard found his perch comfortable enough. A broad band of webbing furnished support for his back, another crossed his chest by way of provision against forward pitching, there were rests for his feet and cloth-wound straps fixed to struts on either side for his hands.

He smiled at Lucy across the empty seat, and was surprised at the clearness with which her answering smile was visible. But he wasn't to see it again for a long and weary time; almost immediately she began to adjust her veil.

The morning had grown much lighter within the last few minutes.

A wait ensued of seemingly interminable duration. A swarm of mechanics, assistants and military aviators buzzed round their feet like bees.

The sky was now pale to the eastern horizon. A fleet of heavy clouds was drifting off into the south, leaving in their wake a thin veil of mist that had fair soon to disappear before the rays of the sun. The atmosphere seemed tolerably clear and not unseasonably cold.

The light grew stronger still—features of distant objects defined themselves; traces of color warmed the winter landscape.

After some time their pilot, wearing his wind-mask, appeared and began to climb to his perch. With a cool nod for Lanyard and a civil bow to his woman passenger he settled himself, adjusted several levers and flirted a gay hand to his brother officers.

There was a warning cry from the rear. The crowd dropped back rapidly to either side. Ducroy lifted his hat in parting salute, cried "Bon voyage!" and scuttled clear like a startled rooster before a motor car. Thereupon the motor and propeller broke loose with a mighty roar comparable only in Lanyard's fancy, to the chant of ten thousand riveting-locomots.

Captain Vauquelin informs me he will be ready to start in five minutes, monsieur." Ducroy announced. "You are just in time."

He felt momentarily as if his tym-

"And mademoiselle?" the adventurer asked, peering anxiously around.

Almost immediately the girl came forward from the shadows with a smile apologetic for the strangeness of her attire.

She had donned, over her street dress, a simple leather garment which enveloped her completely and buttoned tight round wrists and ankles. Her small hat, too, had been replaced by a leather helmet-cap which left only her eyes, nose, mouth and chin exposed, and even these were soon to be hidden by a heavy veil for protection against spattering oil.

"Mademoiselle is not nervous—eh?" Ducroy inquired politely.

Lucy smiled brightly.

"I? Why should I be, monsieur?"

"I trust mademoiselle will permit me to command your courage. Pardon! I have one last word for the ear of Captain Vauquelin."

Lifting his hat, the Frenchman joined the group near the machine.

Lanyard stared unaffectedly at the girl's face, unable to disguise his wonder at the high spirits advertised by her rekindled color and brilliant eyes.

"Well?" she demanded gayly. "Don't tell me I don't look like a fright! I know I do!"

"I dare not tell you how you look to me," Lanyard replied soberly. "But I will say this, that for sheer, downright pluck, you—"

"Thank you, monsieur! And you?"

He glanced with a deprecating smile at the flimsy-looking contrivance to which they were presently to intrust their lives.

"Somehow," said he doubtfully, "I don't feel in the least upset or exhilarated. It seems little out of the average run of life—all in the day's work!"

"I think," she replied, "that you're very like the other lone wolf, the fictitious one—Lupin, you know—a bit of humbug. If you're not nervous, why keep staring, hither and yon—as if you were rather expecting somebody—as if you wouldn't be surprised to see Popinot or De Morbihan pop out of the ground—or Ekstrom!"

"Hum!" he said gravely. "I don't mind telling you now, that's precisely what I am afraid of."

"Nonsense!" the girl cried in open protest. "What could they do?"

"Please don't ask me," Lanyard begged seriously. "I might try to tell you."

I hear that Florence has broken her engagement with you, old fellow," said Ed.

"Yes, judge. Ah reckon dat am so. But yo' see, it's jes' dis way. Dat second wife of mine ain't turned out to be the worker that Ah thought she was gwine t' be."

"I hear that Florence has broken her engagement with you, old fellow," said Ed.

"Well, I'm certainly sorry," said Ed. "Why did she break it?"

"Merly, because she stole kiss."

"What?" cried Ed. "She must be crazy to object to having her fiance steal a kiss from her."

"Well," explained Frank, "the trouble was I didn't steal it from her."

"You should have heard the sermon today, John," said his wife when she came home from church. "It would have done you a lot of good. It was all about men who spend their Sunday evenings playing golf instead of attending divine services."

"It's just as if she wasn't there," replied John. "If I had been the sermon wouldn't have applied to me."

"I want a pair of pants for my sick husband," exclaimed the woman.

"What size?" asked the clerk.

"I don't know, but I think he wears a 14½ collar."

"Pa, what is a diplomat?"

"A diplomat, my son, is a man who remembers a woman's birthday, but forgets her age."

"Well Framed."

"You're the very picture of health."

"Yes, and I'm in a contented frame of mind."—Chicago Tribune.

pathums must burst with the incessant and tremendous concussion registered upon them; but presently this sensation passed, leaving him with that of permanent deafness.

If he could recover and regain control of his startled with the aviator had grasped a lever and the great fabric was in motion.

It swept down the field like a frightened swan, and the wheels of its chassis, registering every infinitesimal irregularity in the surface of the ground, magnified them all a hundred-fold. It was like riding in a tumbler driven at top speed over the Giant's Causeway. Lanyard was shaken violently to the very marrow of his bones; he believed that even his eyes must be rattling in their sockets.

Then the Farrott began to ascend. Singularly enough, this change was marked at first by no more than a slight lessening of the vibration—the machine seemed still to be dashing over a cobbled thoroughfare at break-neck speed; and Lanyard found it difficult to appreciate that they were aloft, even when he looked down and discovered a hundred feet of space between himself and the practice-field.

In another breath they were soaring over rooftops.

Momentarily, now, the shocks became less frequent. And presently they ceased almost altogether, to be repeated only at rare intervals, when the drift of air opposing the planes developed irregularities in its velocity. There succeeded, in contrast, the sublime peace; even the roaring of the propeller dwindled to the negligible status of a sustained drone; the Parrot seemed to float without an effort upon a vast, still sea, flawed only occasionally by inconceivable ripples.

"Uncle Mose, your first wife tells me you are three months behind with your alimony."

"Yes, judge. Ah reckon dat am so. But yo' see, it's jes' dis way. Dat second wife of mine ain't turned out to be the worker that Ah thought she was gwine t' be."

"I hear that Florence has broken her engagement with you, old fellow," said Ed.

"Well, I'm certainly sorry," said Ed. "Why did she break it?"

"Merly, because she stole kiss."

"What?" cried Ed. "She must be crazy to object to having her fiance steal a kiss from her."

"Well," explained Frank, "the trouble was I didn't steal it from her."

"You should have heard the sermon today, John," said his wife when she came home from church. "It would have done you a lot of good. It was all about men who spend their Sunday evenings playing golf instead of attending divine services."

"It's just as if she wasn't there," replied John. "If I had been the sermon wouldn't have applied to me."

"I want a pair of pants for my sick husband," exclaimed the woman.

"What size?" asked the clerk.

"I don't know, but I think he wears a 14½ collar."

"Pa, what is a diplomat?"

HAWAIIAN VOLCANO DUE FOR ERUPTION WITHIN TWO YEARS

American Scientist Predicts Date on Which Mauna Loa Will Blow Up.
—City of 7,000 in Lava
Path.
SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE

Washington, Feb. 10.—The volcano, Mauna Loa, on the island of Hawaii, will blow up between Dec. 1, 1917, and Jan. 31, 1918. If this prediction misses, then the explosion is sure to come between June 1 and July 31, 1918.

The prediction is Dr. T. A. Jaggar's. Dr. Jaggar is the professor of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who has been living in the slopes of Mauna Loa since 1912 studying its activities.

Dr. Jaggar believes that the prediction of volcanic eruptions can be made as a science approximately as exact as that of weather prediction. He is in Washington urging that the Mauna Loa volcano, the most active one on earth, be made into a national park.

Prof. T. A. Jaggar Ascending and that the weather bureau's work be increased to include volcanic eruptions and earthquake prediction.

Such a service might prevent possible great disasters of the future, Dr. Jaggar thinks. The government of Japan began studying volcanoes twenty-five years ago. At least 90,000 people live in the danger zone around Mt. Sakurajima in Japan. Yet when the great eruption occurred in 1914 scores of many lives were lost, because the Japanese scientists had predicted the explosion and the government had temporarily removed the 90,000 population from their homes.

Town in Path of Lava Flow.

Mauna Loa is one of the mightiest of volcanoes. In one single eruption in recent years it poured forth more molten lava than Mount Etna or Mount Vesuvius. The thriving town of Hilo with 7,000 population lies within the path of the coming lava flow.

In 1899 the lava from Mauna Loa came within two miles of Hilo. The frantic population sent for a native princess from a neighboring island. She sacrificed a pullet and a pig at the edge of the lava and the flow ceased.

In 1918 science will have supplanted superstition. The population of Hilo has been warned of the approaching cataclysm by the first American prediction of a volcanic eruption. The population will be moved, perhaps at government expense, if not the lava engulf the city no lives will be lost.

"The Japanese eruptions might possibly have been predicted if science had really understood the workings of Mt. Etna," says Dr. Jaggar.

The United States probably possesses more than a quarter of the active volcanoes on the globe. There is no doubt whatever that the great eruptions are predictable.

An Eruption Every Decade.

"Our observations at Mauna Loa have showed us that its activities occur in regular periods. These six stages as follows: (1) earthquake period; (2) explosion of gas and foamy lava which turns to dust upon cooling in the air; (3) release of gas and adjument of subterranean pressures; (4) eruption of liquid lava; (5) cooling within the volcano, and (6) accumulation of new pressure in the depths below.

It takes about ten years to complete this cycle in Mauna Loa. It was possible for us to predict the gas lava foam eruption of Mauna Loa between Dec. 1, 1915, and 1916, and it actually came on November 25, 1914. Since then there has been the escape of gas (No. 3 in the cycle of stages), and the next activity to be expected is the flow of molten lava.

"This should come in or near January or June, 1918. Why these particular months? Science has discovered that there are tides in the solid mass of the earth just as there are in the ocean. Chicago scientists have demonstrated that the ground beneath our feet rises and falls as much as a foot twice each day. The land tides, just like the ocean tides, are caused by the attractive force of the sun and moon.

"These tides cause tremendous squeezing in the subterranean depths. These tides have come near the summer and winter solstices, when the combined attractive force of the sun and moon is greatest. In 1918 the pressure beneath Mauna Loa will be near the bursting point. The tremendous squeeze of the winter of 1917-1918 is likely to touch it off. If it has not reached the bursting point by then, the next great squeeze will be in the summer of 1918, when the eruption is almost certain to occur."

"PREPARE" THE HOME SAYS ILLINOIS JUDGE

Judge J. P. McGroarty Declares Greatness of Nation is Character of Its People.
[By ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Chicago, Feb. 10.—Speaking before the mid-winter banquet of the Wisconsin Society of Chicago here tonight, Judge John P. McGroarty of the Appellate court of Illinois said: "The people of the United States, the foremost champions of the rights of neutrals and the freedom of the seas, are aroused, as never before, to the uncertainty of the continued maintenance without force, of peace, with honor.

"The widespread existing sentiment in our country in behalf of national preparedness has been strengthened by a personal appeal of the sole man who made it his avocation during his recent tour of the middle west. In this hour, we do not doubt that there still lives a spirit of heroic sacrifice and sublime devotion to our national ideals, ever ready as in the past to manifest itself in behalf of our common country.

"The adoption of a policy of adequate preparedness involves a readjustment of our national policies. We must, at the price, however, be ready to render secure from the invader the nation's honor and the American home. President Wilson says we are a nation of idealists. The greatness of a nation is determined by the character of its people. If we are to retain those ideals so vital to common progress, it must be through the home.

Importance of Home.
"The acceptance of some practicable system of universal military training for the American youth must necessarily include the essential traits of discipline and self-sacrifice. The courts give daily evidence that parental authority is less potent and the limitations imposed by law, for the common good, upon the will of the individual, are more frequently exceeded. Nor can we view with complacency the truth that every sanctity of the home itself is frequently destroyed by the separation, through judicial decree, of its founders, traceable in many instances to an absence of salutary restraint in early life, and failure to realize that marriage is a divine institution.

"Let the spirit of peace and religion forever dwell in the American home, forming the warp and woof of our national life. The titanic struggle now in progress in Europe, awful in its destructiveness and so widespread in its scope, may bring many compensations. From it the Americans are learning the lesson that distance and situation does not render us immune to danger from without."

"A vast number of Wisconsin's citizens announce that they hold this new idea—that universal military training would be productive of better citizenship," said Dr. Holbrook early in his address. He advocated a citizen soldiery as distinguished from the national guard, saying that experts generally had concluded that these most admirable organizations would never be recruited to the necessary federal efficiency and be divorced from their peculiar state obligations."

He proposed "a certain amount" of compulsory military training "for every able-bodied school boy," and quoted Gen. Leonard Wood's endorsement of the results obtained by high school cadet training in Wyoming as "lifting them high above the raw volunteers who are the despair of officers in a crisis." In conclusion Dr. Holbrook said:

Instruct the Boys.
"Can any of us imagine an experience that would do more to bring before an American boy the realization of his duty as a citizen, than to place before him the knowledge of what this great nation of ours contains, what it stands for, what it can do—and then make him feel that it is his nation and that he is to take his part in its sponsorship and stewardship of his country and that, when any band or nation or combination of nations threatens this country, and what is in it and what it stands for, it is he, and not more some hired fighter, who seizes his weapon and rushes to the defense."

"Does any one of doubt that a full realization of that responsibility, and the training that it implies, would fail to stiffen up that moral fiber, and heighten his regard for law and authority and the wholesome, worthwhile things of life?"
